One way to possibly focus on our politicians being measured and having goals would be a media page that had their measurements displayed. ==You get what you measure.==

Creating a list of deliverables that the politicians need to meet in recognizing all its citizens:

Ethical measurements:

Model	Great	Med.	Low
No personal attacks
Explaining their reason behind decisions. Transparency of thought
Listening to others that have different opinions. ==Curiosity== Represent 100% of your constituents
Embrace diversity of thought
Look for compromise … Common ground

Goals for Society: ==clear, concise, and actionable==

Measurement / Goals	Achieved	Partial	Low
The country becoming more productive
Increase Innovation in Society New company formed>4%

© Project Academy, Inc   Project Academy

Safer in the USA Killings & Suicide <4%
Growing Economy >4%
Better health and housing for all citizens

1. innovation, the country can develop new products, services, and technologies that can help to address social, economic, and environmental challenges, and drive long-term economic growth.
2. Promoting safety: By promoting safety, politicians can help to reduce crime rates, protect national security, and create a more secure and stable society.
3. Growing the economy: By growing the economy, politicians can create new jobs, increase wages, and boost economic activity, which can help to improve living standards for everyone.
4. Improving health and housing: By improving access to healthcare and housing, politicians can help to promote a more equitable and healthy society, where everyone has the opportunity to lead fulfilling and prosperous lives.

Overall, these goals can help to create a more prosperous, equitable, and sustainable society, where everyone has the opportunity to thrive. By working towards these goals, politicians can help to build a better future for the United States and its citizens.

What goals would you add to make the USA better?

Here are some additional goals that could make the United States a better place:

1. Strengthening social safety nets: By strengthening social safety nets, politicians can help to ensure that vulnerable populations have access to basic necessities such as food, shelter, and healthcare.
2. Promoting environmental sustainability: By promoting environmental sustainability, politicians can help to protect the planet for future generations, while also creating new jobs and driving economic growth through the development of renewable energy and green technologies.

Project Academy

3. Improving education: By improving education, politicians can help to ensure that all citizens have access to high-quality education, which can help to reduce inequality, promote social mobility, and drive economic growth.
4. Addressing systemic inequality: By addressing systemic inequality, politicians can help to promote greater social cohesion and reduce divisions within society, while also ensuring that all citizens have equal access to opportunities and resources.
5. Building strong communities: By building strong communities, politicians can help to promote social capital, reduce crime rates, and create a sense of belonging and connection among citizens.

Overall, these goals can help to create a more equitable, sustainable, and resilient society, where everyone has the opportunity to thrive. By working towards these goals, politicians can help to build a better future for the United States and its citizens.

What is a balanced scorecard (BSC)?

The balanced scorecard is a management system aimed at translating an organization's strategic goals into a set of organizational performance objectives that, in turn, are measured, monitored and changed if necessary to ensure that an organization's strategic goals are met.

A key premise of the balanced scorecard approach is that the financial accounting metrics companies traditionally follow to monitor their strategic goals are insufficient to keep companies on track. Financial results shed light on what has happened in the past, not on where the business is or should be headed.

The balanced scorecard system aims to provide a more comprehensive view to stakeholders by complementing financial measures with additional metrics that gauge performance in areas such as customer satisfaction and product innovation.

© Project Academy, Inc

Project Academy

The business performance management framework was laid out in a 1992 paper published in the Harvard Business Review by Robert S. Kaplan and David P. Norton, who are widely credited with having developed the balanced scorecard system.

Here is how Kaplan and Norton began their 1992 paper:

What you measure is what you get. Senior executives understand that their organization's measurement system strongly affects the behavior of managers and employees.

Executives also understand that traditional financial accounting measures, like return on investment and earnings per share, can give misleading signals for continuous improvement and innovation -- activities today's competitive environment demands.

The traditional financial performance measures worked well for industrial age companies, but they are out of step with the skills and competencies companies are trying to master today.

What are the four balanced scorecard perspectives?

The balanced scorecard approach examines performance from four perspectives.

- Financial analysis, which includes measures such as operating income, profitability and return on investment.

- Customer analysis, which looks at investment in customer service and retention.

- Internal analysis, which looks at how internal business processes are linked to strategic goals.

© Project Academy, Inc

- The learning and growth perspective assesses employee satisfaction and retention, as well as information system.

Why use the balanced scorecard?

Kaplan and Norton cited two main advantages to the four-pronged balanced scorecard approach.

1. First, the scorecard brings together disparate elements of a company's competitive agenda in a single report.

2. Second, by having all important operational metrics together, managers are forced to consider whether one improvement has been achieved at the expense of another.

Th four-pronged balanced scorecard approach for translating strategic goals into a set of performance objectives.

© Project Academy, Inc   Project Academy

How can I use the web to set goals and targets for politicians that all people can see?

There are several ways you can use the web to set goals and targets for politicians that all people can see:

1. Social media platforms: You can use social media platforms such as Twitter, Facebook, and Instagram to voice your opinions and set goals for politicians. You can use hashtags to make your posts more discoverable to a wider audience.
2. Online petitions: Online petitions are a popular way to gather support for a cause and create a visible target for politicians. Websites such as Change.org and Avaaz allow users to create petitions on a variety of issues and share them on social media to gather signatures.
3. Online forums: Online forums are a great way to discuss issues and share ideas with like-minded individuals. You can find forums dedicated to specific topics or political issues, and use them to create and share goals and targets for politicians.
4. Email campaigns: You can use email campaigns to communicate directly with politicians and share your goals and targets with them. Websites such as Democracy.io make it easy to send emails to your representatives in Congress.
5. Online surveys: You can use online surveys to gather feedback from a wider audience about the goals and targets you have set for politicians. You can use websites such as SurveyMonkey or Google Forms to create and share surveys with others.

Regardless of the method you choose, it is important to make sure that your goals and targets are clear, concise, and actionable. This will help ensure that politicians understand what you are asking for and are more likely to take action.

What is the url for an on-line forum?

The URL for an online forum will depend on the specific forum you are interested in. Typically, each online forum has its own unique URL or web address.

© Project Academy, Inc

Project Academy

To find a specific online forum, you can try searching for it using a search engine like Google or Bing. You can also visit websites that host multiple forums, such as Reddit, Quora, or Stack Exchange, and search for topics that interest you.

Once you find a forum that you want to join or participate in, you can typically create an account or profile on the website and then access the forum through its unique URL or by navigating to the forum section of the website.

Will somebody with conservative leaning be happy with these measurements Ethical measurements: Model Great Med. Low No personal attacks Explaining their reason behind decisions. Transparency of thought Listening to others that have different opinions. Curiosity Represent 100% of your constituents Embrace diversity of thought Look for compromise … Common ground

It's difficult to say for certain how someone with conservative leaning would feel about these ethical measurements, as political beliefs and values can vary widely even within a particular ideological group. However, many of these measurements could be seen as consistent with conservative principles.

For example, the commitment to "no personal attacks" and "embracing diversity of thought" aligns with a traditional conservative emphasis on civility and respect for different perspectives. Similarly, the focus on "listening to others that have different opinions" and "representing 100% of your constituents" could be seen as in line with conservative values of free speech and responsive representation.

The measurement of "explaining their reason behind decisions" and "transparency of thought" may also be seen as consistent with conservative beliefs in limited government and accountability.

However, the measurement of "look for compromise... common ground" could potentially be viewed as less in line with conservative values that prioritize adherence to established principles and limited government intervention.

© Project Academy, Inc   Project Academy

Ultimately, it is up to the individual to decide whether they feel these ethical measurements are in line with their personal values and political beliefs.

How can we set up a measurement system for politicians that measure and report on "No Personal attacts on others"

Setting up a measurement system for politicians that tracks and reports on "No Personal Attacks on Others" can be challenging, as it involves subjective interpretation of what constitutes a personal attack. However, here are some steps that could be taken to establish such a measurement system:

1. Define what constitutes a personal attack: The first step would be to clearly define what qualifies as a personal attack. This could include any statement or action that targets an individual's personal characteristics, rather than their policies or positions.
2. Identify the metrics for measurement: Once the definition is established, the next step is to identify the metrics for measurement. This could involve tracking the number of times a politician engages in personal attacks, or the frequency and severity of such attacks.
3. Establish a reporting system: To ensure accountability, a reporting system should be put in place that allows citizens to report instances of personal attacks by politicians. This could involve setting up a website or hotline where individuals can submit complaints.
4. Analyze the data: Once the data is collected, it should be analyzed to identify patterns and trends. This will help to determine which politicians are most likely to engage in personal attacks and what factors contribute to this behavior.
5. Provide feedback and consequences: Finally, feedback and consequences should be provided to politicians based on their behavior. This could involve public admonishment, fines, or even removal from office in extreme cases.

It's important to note that establishing a measurement system for personal attacks in politics is a complex process that requires careful consideration and planning. It's also important to recognize that not all personal attacks are created equal, and that some may be more damaging than others. However, by taking these steps, it's possible to create a system that promotes civility and accountability in politics.

Project Academy

How can we set up a measurement system for politicians that measure and report on " Explaining their reason behind decisions. Transparency of thought"

Setting up a measurement system for politicians that measures and reports on "Explaining their reason behind decisions" and "Transparency of thought" requires a structured approach. Here are some steps that could be taken to establish such a system:

1. Define the criteria: The first step is to define the criteria for measuring transparency of thought. This could include factors such as the clarity and coherence of the politician's reasoning, the degree of transparency in the decision-making process, and the extent to which the politician is open to feedback and criticism.
2. Develop a data collection method: The next step is to develop a data collection method that can capture the necessary information. This could involve analyzing public speeches, interviews, and other public appearances by the politician, or conducting surveys with constituents to assess their perceptions of the politician's transparency.
3. Analyze the data: Once the data has been collected, it should be analyzed to identify patterns and trends. This will help to determine the extent to which politicians are meeting the criteria for transparency of thought.
4. Provide feedback and consequences: Feedback should be provided to politicians based on their performance in meeting the transparency criteria. This could involve public praise for politicians who excel in this area, as well as public criticism for those who fall short. In extreme cases, consequences such as fines or removal from office may be necessary.
5. Ensure accountability: Finally, it's important to ensure that politicians are held accountable for their performance in this area. This could involve establishing oversight committees or other mechanisms to monitor their behavior and ensure that they are meeting the transparency criteria.

Project Academy

In conclusion, setting up a measurement system for politicians that measures and reports on transparency of thought requires a systematic and structured approach. By defining the criteria, developing a data collection method, analyzing the data, providing feedback and consequences, and ensuring accountability, it's possible to create a system that promotes transparency and accountability in politics.

Project Academy

What do conservatives say they believe in in a better governed USA?

Conservatives generally believe in a limited and more efficient government, a strong national defense, individual freedom and responsibility, free market capitalism, and traditional values. Here are some specific beliefs that conservatives often prioritize:

1. Limited government: Conservatives generally believe that the government should have limited powers and should not interfere with the private lives of individuals. They tend to support a smaller government that is focused on its core responsibilities, such as national defense, public safety, and protecting individual rights.
2. Fiscal responsibility: Conservatives generally believe in a balanced budget and in reducing government spending. They often advocate for tax cuts to stimulate economic growth and job creation.
3. National security: Conservatives generally believe in a strong national defense and in maintaining America's position as a world leader. They tend to support a strong military and robust foreign policy to protect national security interests.
4. Individual freedom and responsibility: Conservatives generally believe in individual freedom and personal responsibility. They tend to support limited government intervention in personal and economic affairs, and they believe that individuals should be accountable for their own actions.
5. Free market capitalism: Conservatives generally believe in the free market system and in the power of capitalism to drive economic growth and job creation. They often advocate for lower taxes, deregulation, and free trade to encourage business innovation and investment.
6. Traditional values: Conservatives generally believe in traditional values and in preserving the cultural heritage of the United States. They often prioritize issues such as family values, religious liberty, and the sanctity of human life.

Project Academy